Costs and profit declaration in a mining business: The basics that workers and other external stakeholders need to know

The National Minimum Wage Debate in South Africa: Not a Question of Better Wages at the Expense of Fewer Jobs.

What is the likelihood that the Labour Relations Amendment Act (6 of 2014) will increase permanent employment in the construction sector?

SATRI Profile

The Sam Tambani Research Institute is a Public Benefit Non-profit Company registered in 2012. The idea of establishing the institute was perceived jointly by the NUM and MIT. It arose from the need to consolidate NUM efforts to ensure that workers get a fair share of what they produce which enables them in turn to their livelihoods.

It was recognised that interventions aimed at improving workers and their families' welfare had become complex and required a great deal of factual information. SATRI would be responsible for gathering and analysing such information through its targeted research agenda.

Objective

The Institute's major objective is to undertake research and analysis of substantive and primary issues affecting the welfare of workers in general, but especially workers in the mining, construction and energy sectors of South Africa. From the research conducted, it produces publications and recommendations that inform policies and have a bearing on the welfare of workers and workers' communities.
